Your first question is about the terminology of CRACK (compatibility records of installed applications). Your second question isn't even about Java, let alone about CRACKS. Your third question isn't about CRACKS. At least not in the way that is relevant to your fourth question. Your fourth question is about Windows, but not a Windows version that, in turn, is relevant to your fifth question. Your sixth question is about a bootable flash drive that will lead to the video you want, which you already have in a way. Your seventh question is about an entirely different flash drive that has nothing to do with the question you asked. You need to be more focused, and use the tags that seem to be applicable to the problem you're asking about. If it's still unclear to you why the situation is confusing, don't ask any more questions on this site. Just go away and find a different question-asker. A: Just out of curiosity, is there a reason your question is on hold? A: @jsarfah: Hey there, I just added the title and tags in the edit after you asked this in chat as an edit. Wasn't sure if I should re-open it but I did, I haven't tried anything since then and I don't see 570a42141b
