What is it about late September, early October, and the annual return of the September issue of The Believer magazine? I mean, sure, the whole month is bookended with the fact that September is also National Dog Days of Summer, but that's like saying, you know, the whole month is Friday. All of a sudden, I find myself with a pile of stuff to say about The Believer — a stack that will, by this time next week, probably be so big that it will look like a real magazine. But it is, it's also just a pile of stuff. In case you weren't aware, The Believer is the magazine that just published something on the great Pele, the Brazilian soccer player who scored more than 2,000 goals, and whose face and likeness are almost everywhere you look. My colleague, Patrick Caviezel, wrote a terrific piece about Pele and the magazines that have featured him, and what that says about Pele's posthumous visibility. He also talked about the book that The Believer put out about Pele, and the magazine's history of Pele. Both of those are worth reading, but they are also a great jumping-off point. I just wish I had the time to go into more detail. I actually liked Pele.

But we don't have that kind of time, so I'll do this instead. Pele is best known to soccer fans for scoring two goals at the World Cup in 1958 and for the 1958 World Cup
