Q: Most commonly used JPA criteria, repositories, and services in spring boot I am building an application using JPA 2, Spring boot. I have seen most of the tutorials online, which use JPA repositories, JPA criteria, JPA services, and JPA repository interfaces.

Although, the tutorials are great and are helping me make solid applications. Now I want to start making a project of my own. I want to know if all the above mentioned things, whether they are the best practices or not. If they are not best practices or not which one should i use? A: JPA Criteria is like "unlimited" criteria. If you want only one row and use a jpa service like Hibernate, then use the get() method. However, if you want many rows or you want to have more complex queries, then you need to use JPA Criteria. You can find an example here. CriteriaBuilder and CriteriaQuery are abstract classes, and they are used to create a query. Repository repository = getJpaRepository(Customer.class); Customer customer = repository.findOne(1L); JPA Repositories are a good practice to extend your entities. It means that you can change them and keep JPA and Hibernate happy. You can find an example here. A: Jpa Criteria is a highly powerful way to query but it is a bit tricky to learn. Jpa Repositories is a good starting point. While
