Dynamic gradation of nanoporous materials and their application for CO₂ adsorption. A novel facile strategy for achieving uniform porosity using a catalytic decomposition method is presented. A dynamic gradient in porosity is created by changing the catalyst concentration in the reaction mixture. The resulting thin-pore-size control provides the possibility of tailoring nanoscale materials for applications in various fields. The novel synthesis methodology is used to prepare ZnO nanoporous materials with dynamic pore sizes from below 10 nm down to the sub-10 nm scale. From the simulation and experimental results, the synthesis strategy can be considered as a core-shell structure and pore-size control is achieved by formation of a passivation layer on the catalyst particle. In contrast to most known methods that rely on a sintering reaction, the solvent-free synthesis is fast, does not use any stabilizing agent, and does 3a67dffeec
